A LETTER TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

Rafe Esquith, the "Outstanding Teacher of 1992," with John F. Cooke at last year's ceremony for* The Walt Disney Company Presents The American Teacher Awards.

In April and May, I had the opportunity to participate in a unique event: The Disney Channel's Tenth Anniversary Tour. This cross-country caravan of Disney Channel stars, including members of the casts from Adventures in Wonderland and the Mickey Mouse Club, stopped at local libraries to put on a musical program that promoted reading and literacy and that encouraged support for libraries' educational programs. Here at The Disney Channel, we feel strongly that in an age of electronic information and entertainment, it's important to stress to young people that effective communication depends on the ability to read and write well. And libraries are vital social institutions: not only do they encourage literacy but they also provide a vast bank of knowledge and resources for the public.

I mention this because September marks the beginning of the traditional school year. At The Disney Channel it also marks the increased activity that occurs as one of our most important programming events draws near: The Walt Disney Company Presents The American Teacher Awards. This year's program, our fourth, will be coming to you in November from the Walt Disney World Resort in Florida. It's our opportunity to honor the entire teaching profession, and specifically 36 outstanding educators drawn from 12 different areas of instruction. The program is complete with celebrity presenters, musical productions (featuring students from performing arts classes), and profiles of the teacher-honorees. Past celebrity presenters include Jay Leno, Oprah Winfrey, Dustin Hoffman, Melanie Griffith, and Don Johnson. At last year's ceremony, Johnny Carson remarked that The American Teacher Awards was the most deserving awards show on television.

I think you'll agree with Mr. Carson's assessment. The Walt Disney Company Presents The American Teacher Awards is a moving event. We're proud to honor America's educators, the men and women who play such important roles in shaping the future. I hope you'll join me in November for the fourth annual American Teacher Awards.

THE HOTTEST CAST IN HOLLYWOOD

Coming to a theatre near you this fall is Walt Disney Pictures' new adventure film The Three Musketeers. And this adaptation of Alexander Dumas's epic tale boasts one of the hottest casts in Hollywood: portraying the stalwart Arthos, Porthos, and Aramis are none other than Keifer Sutherland, Charlie Sheen, and Oliver Platt, while D'Artagnan is played by Chris O'Donnell (Scent of a Woman). Nor does the film lack for really great villains: portraying the evil Cardinal Richelieu is Tim Curry; Rebecca De Mornay plays the bewitching and treacherous Lady De Winter.

MEET A NEW TYPE OF CARTOON HERO

In August, Disney Channel subscribers can meet a cartoon hero for the '90s—a hip blue Tyrannosaurus named Recycle Rex. Rex is the star of an educational animated program that teaches youngsters the importance of recycling, reducing, and reusing material to help preserve our environment. Created in conjunction with the California Department of Conservation as part of the Youth Recycling Education Campaign, the 10-minute cartoon tells the story of Rex and his dino-friends as they try to prevent their playing field from becoming a landfill by finding new uses for their "garbage." John Javna, author and publisher of the national bestseller 50 Things You Can Do To Save The Earth, says, "My son and I thoroughly enjoyed Recycle Rex. As a parent it's great to know such an effective tool will be used to educate our kids about conservation." Recycle Rex airs between regularly scheduled Disney Channel programs in August and September.

COMPUTERS: TUTOR, TEACHER, OR TOY?

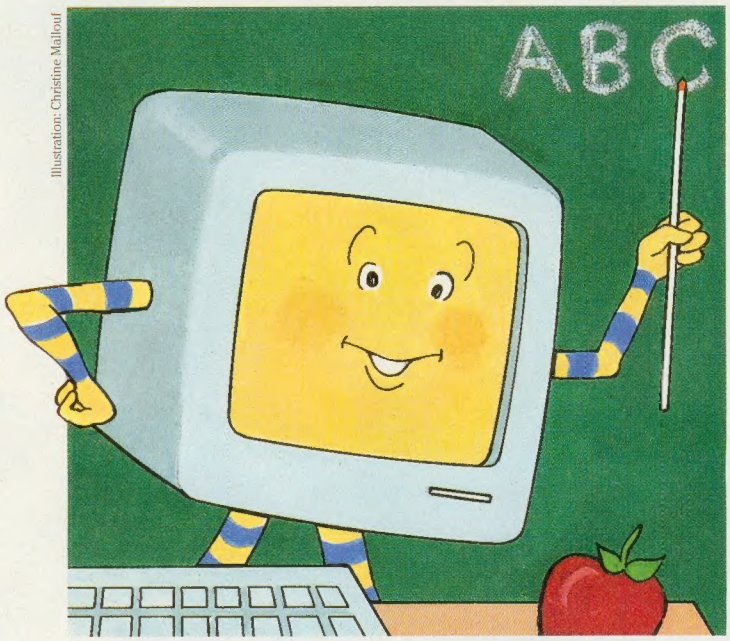

Illustration: Christine Mallouf

It seems so 21st century—a sea of students abandoning pen and paper for keyboards and color monitors. But how far can technology go in lifting American students from a state of slipping test scores to a state of real achievement?

Stan Warford, professor of computer science at Pepperdine University in Malibu, California, is skeptical about the power of technology to truly educate youth. "Technology has the potential to have a tremendous positive impact," Warford says, "but it will not solve the problems that lay at the root of our educational crisis."

Warford is concerned that parents who see a classroom filled with technological tools often feel reassured that their children are getting the best education available. "Not so. The software we have cannot replace teacher attention. A lot of educational software is really just expensive flashcards. I don't see technology as able to inspire students to read Shakespeare or to get excited about poetry."

Where Warford does see potential for computers is in mathematics. Most of the algebraic and trigonometric calculations that have typically troubled students can now be done quickly and easily on a computer, freeing the student and teacher to spend time analyzing the set-up and solution of a problem. "The tools can do the grunt work now, and the emphasis can be on learning to think."

Peter Kovaric, director of educational technology in the graduate school of education at UCLA, says the key to the success of technology in education lies in how the tools are implemented at a school. "Technology by itself is useless. You are better off improving the quality and quantity of teachers than putting money into the tools."

Well-integrated computer systems can, however, help children learn to read, to use the keyboard—which makes writing easier—and to compute. But Kovaric says that if the technology and the curriculum are not closely tied, and if the teachers don't themselves understand and value the technology for what it can do, computer time often becomes play time or free time.

Some computer experts say that educators now realize that technology, while valuable, is not the panacea to the education crisis, as many had hoped a decade ago. Experts point out that teaching involves the human dynamic; it is the relationship between teacher and student that inspires a pupil and spurs his or her interest. "If you want a child to grow up and value learning, a machine is not a good model," says Kovaric.

Warford says he fears educators and parents tend to overstate the long-term worth of computers. "If I had a choice between a student who had learned to read, write, do math, and think—but had never seen a computer—and a student who was weak in those skills but adept at using a computer, I would say the first student would have a far better chance of succeeding in computer science."

A back-to-school checkup is not just about making sure that all the right immunizations have been given and the required sports physical forms have been signed, although that's important, too. "A physical examination allows the health practitioner to ensure that a child is physically—and emotionally—on track," Corrigan says. "It also offers the practitioner an opportunity to build a relationship with a young patient, and to teach the child some basics about taking responsibility for health and safety.

"I recommend a physical at least every other year," Corrigan says. "We can pick up on problems and we can head them off early." In addition to the basic physical exam, the checkup includes hearing and vision checks—problems can show up at any time. The exam also allows the practitioner to talk with the parents about any physical, developmental, or learning problems a child may have.

Some issues, such as school phobias, may look like physical problems but may be caused by fear or anxiety. "Many children with stomachaches, headaches, or diarrhea need help with psychological or social concerns," Corrigan says.

As children reach age 13, most pediatricians ask the parents to step out of the examining room so that the first steps toward a successful and direct doctor-patient relationship may be made. "At this time I talk to children about their responsibility for their health," Corrigan says. "I ask them questions about how things are going at school; whether any of their friends are taking drugs, drinking and driving, or engaging in other high-risk behavior."

Most children, from age seven and up, also benefit from a discussion about good eating habits and exercise. Corrigan finds an increasing number of children obsessed with the fear of being overweight. "The regular exam is a good time to talk about body image and self-esteem."

The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends that at age 11, 12, or older, a second immunization should be given to a child for measles, mumps and rubella (MMR). At age 14, most children need a diphtheria-tetanus (DT) booster. Corrigan also recommends that children get a tuberculosis (TB) skin test every two years.

A team sports physical exam is designed to help weed out problems that could interfere with a child successfully playing the sport or that might endanger the child's health. In addition to checking out the child's basic systems, Corrigan says the exam is a good time to counsel the child for whom a particular sport may not be ideal. "I would steer a child with asthma away from track, but would encourage him or her to try swimming."

In addition to providing a regular physical exam, Corrigan advises parents not to underestimate their own role in shaping their children's attitudes toward health. "Parents need to model good health behaviors, because the kids are watching," she warns.

HOTSHOT SHOES

Getting new shoes makes going back to school more bearable. And the footwear kids are clamoring for this season looks a bit like downsized adult fare, says Jim Hanley, merchandise manager for children's shoes for Nordstrom department stores.

"Expect to see the platform look, compressed for children's safety, the Doc Marten work shoe, and high-topped everything, from athletic shoes to brightly colored leathers," Hanley says.

Patterns and ornaments are important this fall, too, as are the new colors like forest green and denim blue. For girls, if the shoes themselves are boring, bright and interesting socks are must-haves—and the socks have to coordinate with part of the outfit.

Hanley says the trends this year in children's and teen footwear aren't far from what most parents would like themselves. Most of all, parents want their kids' shoes to fit, but after that, they also like the bright colors, the high-tops, and the workshoe look.

To you, it's a puppet.

To your child, it's creative interaction, hand coordination, conversation skills and a cool dude to hang out with.

At KinderCare, a puppet show is more than just an act. It's an exercise in skills that are part of real life. That's why the programs at KinderCare are designed to help your child choose activities that lead to social, physical, emotional and intellectual growth. It's a concept we call Whole Child Development.

And when a grown-up idea like that can direct children to bigger and better roles, we think it's the perfect beginning to the story.

DID YOU KNOW...?

35% of consumers wear athletic shoes primarily for sports and fitness activities, while 65% wear them for other activities, such as shopping, school, work, social activities, and leisure, according to a 1992 Athletic Footwear Association survey.

The average number of pairs of athletic shoes owned:

Males	2.8
Females	2.9
Teens	3.2

The top three characteristics consumers value in athletic shoes:

1. Comfort, fit, and feel.
2. Suits today's active lifestyle.
3. Has performance advantages.

Sources: AFA national surveys

ATHLETIC SHOES: FROM HIGH-TOPS TO AIR PUMPS

It wasn't until the mid-70s, when the interest in personal fitness and sports took off, that athletic shoes started getting interesting. Now about 90 manufacturers distribute athletic footwear in the United States, and the shoes range from computer-aided designs in space-age plastics to leather and canvas, according to Gregg Hartley, executive director of the Athletic Footwear Association.

Athletic shoes are now worn more often for school, for work, and for casual wear than they are worn for specific sports activities. The amount Americans spend annually on athletic footwear has more than tripled over the past 10 years.

The international competition in athletic footwear has created big improvements in design and quality, Hartley adds. Leather uppers, better cuts, and light-weight styles have all been used in the last five years to improve the look, comfort and support of shoes.

Many of the styles popular today—air pumps and air bags in the soles—were designed to meet the needs of top athletes but have trickled down to become popular even with young children. Other designs—bright colors and battery-energized lights in the soles—were developed to attract buyers more interested in fun than function.

Experts in athletic footwear say the athletic shoe market has led to increased demand for greater comfort in all shoe styles.

Lifestyles & Activities

ART IS HOT

The study of art doesn't have to be stuffy anymore. Now it can be a family activity.

Not only do many art museums have special sections and programs devoted to children, there are books geared not to the art historian but to those who want a visually exciting and entertaining presentation. The books tempt the browser to explore the lives, minds and brushwork of the greats.

Take, for example, The Art Pack, by Christopher Frayling, Helen Frayling, and Ron Van Der Meer (Alfred A. Knopf, 1993, $40.00). The book is arranged like an artist's portfolio with tools, information, ideas, and reference materials. It comes equiped with everything from a cardboard model of a camera obscura to a pop-out model of the Parthenon that teaches the principles of proportion. Even those who have previously managed to avoid the study of art will not be able to resist the hands-on, see-how-this-works approach.

Other books are designed to help children begin to bond with great art—and to understand more about it. For example, Eyewitness Art: Monet, by Jude Welton (Dorling Kindersley, 1992, $16.95), is one of a series of books that uses hundreds of close-ups, captions, photos from the era, and vignettes from the author's life to give a complete sense of the painter and his work.

In the book on Monet, there is a letter written in January, 1869, by the poor artist to his friend, asking for white, black and cobalt blue paints. There is a photograph of the Monet family's two homes—all details that help make the artist's life more real.

For older children and adults who want to try creating great art themselves, there are books that take the reader from the point of purchasing supplies to actually painting a wide range of subjects and scenes. Ray Smith's Watercolor Landscape (Dorling Kindersley, 1993, $16.95) walks the beginner through a series of exercises that cover the basics of watercolor landscape painting. Acclaimed watercolors from the masters of the medium are interspersed throughout the work, serving to both inspire and to teach.

BACK PACKS ARE IT:
From pre-school through graduate school, students everywhere are using backpacks to carry everything from snacks and toys to lap-tops and texts. For the youngest set, there are secret pockets, water bottle holders, and separate sections for sweaters and pencils and other essentials. For older students, the high-country look is big: packs that could work on the trail as well as on campus. Lands' End offers a range of packs and duffles for students of all sizes: the red small duffle has an optional shoulder strap, and can hold anything from lunches to a sweatshirt, $10.00; the small blue bookbag has a zippered inner pocket and an outside pocket for quick access, $18.00.

Nutrition & Health

THAT IMPORTANT MEAL

While cookbook breakfasts feature heart-shaped mini-waffles with fresh-picked raspberries sprinkled on top, most busy families serve such breakfasts only in their dreams.

The average household's morning more resembles life in a hectic train station than life in a sedate bed-and-breakfast, and typically a family's first meal of the day is inhaled—or skipped.

Registered dietician Karen Decker, a nutritionist at Los Robles Regional Medical Center in Thousand Oaks, California, says breakfasts are frequently a frustrating meal for families. "A lot of kids don't eat anything for breakfast, either because there's a shortage of time, or they are not hungry, or they don't like the options available."

If children skip breakfast, they must last about 18 hours without a meal—from dinner at around 6 p.m. to at least noon of the next day. That, Decker says, can lead to fatigue and lack of alertness in school.

The best bet is to make breakfast easy, but nutritious. The choices don't have to sound good to parents, and the options don't have to be hot. "Peanut butter and jelly, a carton of yogurt, pizza, and sandwiches are all healthy alternatives many children like," Decker says.

GUILT-FREE (BUT QUICK) BREAKFASTS

These two recipes won't be found in a typical cookbook, but dietician Karen Decker says they're quick, guilt-free solutions to the week-day breakfast crunch:

TOPPINGS

Take:
One slice of any bread: raisin, wheat, bagel, english muffin, reheated or frozen pancake or waffle, or pita pocket.

Add:
One tablespoon of honey, jelly, maple syrup, orange juice, applesauce, mashed bananas, etc.

Top with:
One tablespoon of raisin, sunfower or sesame seeds, dry cereal, granola, shredded carrots, alfalfa sprouts.

Serve with orange juice and milk.

BREAKFAST POPS

Ingredients:
1 cup of plain yogurt
1 banana
1 cup juice

AWARD-WINNING ANIMATION

Charlie Brown and the Peanuts gang are coming to The Disney Channel in October. In fact, The Disney Channel has acquired virtually the entire Peanuts library—58 programs, including seven titles that have not been seen on television since the 1970s. And the Peanuts television programs are the most honored animated programs in television history, having garnered five Emmy and two Peabody Awards—as well as 17 Emmy nominations.

"Walt Disney and Charles Schulz have been two giants in family entertainment for decades, and we're happy to be joining forces on The Disney Channel," says Lee Mendelson of United Media/Mendelson Productions. "Many of the Peanuts specials have not been televised in more than 20 years, and we're pleased to show them to a whole new generation of fans."

Honey, I Blew Up the Kid

TWINS IN THEIR "TERRIBLE TWOS" —AND THEY'RE 112 FEET TALL!

"This was the most challenging picture I've ever done," says director Randall Kleiser of Honey, I Blew Up the Kid, a world television premiere on The Disney Channel in November. "Having a 2 1/2-year-old in the lead role was a major hurdle. One can't direct a 2 1/2-year-old because this is that 'terrible twos' period when they've learned to say 'no.'"

Actually Kleiser had two 2 1/2-year-olds to deal with: the role of Adam Szalinski was played by twins Joshua and Daniel Shalikar. But Kleiser's stars made an important contribution to the movie: "We had to go to Las Vegas for a scene where Adam gets loose. I knew we weren't going to get the baby to do exactly what we wanted so before we left we put him on the blue screen stage and let him improvise. At one point he pulled a candy out of his pocket and threw it down. That became a scene in the film—a giant peppermint smashes through a car window."

Looking Back at

Mick Fleetwood surveys a quarter century of musical memories with the world premiere of FLEETWOOD MAC: GOING HOME

FLEETWOOD MAC

By Mr. Bonzai

To go home with Fleetwood Mac is to go back more than 25 years to the roots of an ever-changing musical phenomenon—a phenomenon that made pop history yet again at the 1993 Presidential Inauguration. "Don't Stop" was adopted by the Clinton campaign as a theme song for the future, and when Bill Clinton made it to the White House he requested that the original Fleetwood Mac lineup from the 1977 Rumours album come together as a symbol of reunification. A lot of people loved this particular incarnation (1975-87) of the band, and with sales of more than 20 million, Rumours still holds the record as the biggest selling album by a rock group.

This is the band with founding drummer Mick Fleetwood and bass player John McVie—the "Fleetwood" and the "Mac." Add to that Christine "Don't Stop" McVie, who joined the band in 1970. Lindsey "Go Your Own Way" Buckingham and Stevie "Gold Dust Woman" Nicks were the other stellar members of this most prominent of the various Fleetwood Mac lineups.

We met with the executive producer of this Disney Channel special, Mick Fleetwood himself, in the elegant boardroom of his corporate—but very comfortable—offices in Santa Monica. Standing an impressive six and a half feet tall, Fleetwood's more robust looking than he appeared on those memorable album covers. The gangly slimness of the legendary madcap drummer has given way to the muscular fitness of a distinguished English gentleman in his 40-somethings.

I asked Mick what he'd learned after going through the archives to assemble this retrospective and he laughed, then answered candidly: "Bloody lucky still to be here!—I realized our heritage and I am very proud of our early years. I have no regrets and working on this overview was a healthy experience—if a little sobering at times."

This is a hard-rock look at a band that was notorious for luxurious excess and romantic intrigues—hence the Rumours album title. And this program is chock full of footage that has never been seen publicly before. In fact, some of it was simply recorded for personal memories. When you think that Fleetwood Mac was once more popular in Europe than the Beatles or the Stones, you sit up and witness the fascinating evolution of a musical identity that has gone through some very powerful transformations for a very long time.

World Premiere on Sunday Night Showcase

The filmed history actually predates the Mac band with footage of Mick drumming in his late teens. Fleetwood was discovered by a London musician named Peter Bardens, who heard him playing in a garage.

"Peter knocked on the door and offered me a gig," Mick recalls with a chuckle. "My parents had bought me a Rogers drum kit and it was probably the drums more than my playing that interested him." Eventually a band called Shotgun Express materialized with Mick on drums, Rod Stewart singing, and a lad named Peter Green playing extraordinary guitar. Mick would also join John Mayall's Bluesbreakers, which featured Eric Clapton in one of its many permutations.

The Mac family tree all started as "Peter Green's Fleetwood Mac," named by the stellar guitarist after his favorite rhythm section. The name would be shortened and the band would rapidly go on to critical recognition and worldwide popularity. During this period of the '60s, Peter Green vied with Eric Clapton as the foremost guitarist of the day. He was known as "The Green God," and according to Mick, The Beatles recorded "The Sun King" in his honor. Featured are rare Fleetwood Mac performances of the snow-stopping numbers "Oh Well" and "Albatross," Green's haunting instrumental that would go to Number One in England, and then return to the charts again many years later.

"We have some excellent footage of the early days with Peter Green," Mick says proudly, "and I'm attempting to show where this band came from, which is indeed the whole point of the program. There's some candid stuff, and backstage things, some interviews have been discovered—should be quite an eye opener to a lot of people."

Nearby in the editing room at Delilah Films is producer/director Stephanie Bennett, well known for such projects as The Compleat Beatles and Chuck Berry—Hail! Hail! Rock 'N' Roll. Bennett explains, "Mick's narrative is the thread in a story that is told through the evolution of the music, revealing the culture and the history. I'm a huge fan, and we've got the best performances of the big hits, rare takes, and a close look at extraordinary individuals, each one as talented as the next."

Co director and editor Janice Engel assembled this special from over 120 sources drawn from four continents, material ranging from home movies to extravagant concert footage. "Some of it had never even been transferred from the negative," Engel says, obviously thrilled. "We made the transfer and actually cut it together for the first time."

Peter Green left Fleetwood Mac to follow his own religious beliefs, and for awhile the band was devastated. Mick confides, "I've always needed to reach out to other people to fulfill my desires. That's the motivating reason why this band has never broken up. Sometimes John and I wonder what it is, but being a drummer and a bass player, we need a band to play with."

© Sam Emerson/SHOOTING STAR

Of their first album together, Stevie Nicks says, "It only took three months, from beginning to end —five wild Indians in one room."

In the early '70s, guitarist Bob Welch joined the band, and in Mick's words, "brought a new style into Mac which kept us alive in America for many years. Bob was there for about five albums, all of which were our lifeblood."

The most popular—or most remembered—lineup of Mac musical talent was launched with the self-titled Fleetwood Mac album of 1975, the first with Lindsey Buckingham and Stevie Nicks. In Fleetwood Mac: Going Home we get a good look at "I'm So Afraid," "Rhiannon," "Landslide," and "Say You Love Me," which Mick describes as the classic Christine McVie song. Of their first album together, Stevie Nicks says, "It only took three months, from beginning to end—five wild Indians in one room."

Featured from the group's megahit Rumours album are the songs "Go Your Own Way," "Dreams," and "You Make Lovin' Fun." The band's also seen in their appearance on the Grammy Awards for the Album of the Year. And Buckingham shows his prowess as a major guitarist of the period while Stevie Nicks weaves that ol' silk magic in never-before-seen footage that was shot during a Fleetwood Mac tour of Japan.

Fleetwood Mac: Going Home also takes a look at the making of the highly innovative album Tusk. The spectacle of the entire USC marching band recording the album's title track at Dodger Stadium is juxtaposed with views of some unusual studio techniques: Lindsey Buckingham sings on his hands and knees into a ceramic floor and even chases a special audio effect by playing back music and re-recording it in the tile bathroom of his vintage Los Angeles home. Through "Gypsy," "Little Lies," and "Big Love," we follow the ever-changing Mac chemistry.

In the final analysis, Fleetwood Mac is actually many bands with many forms of memorable beauty, brains and power. But the story isn't over yet. "I suppose you'll have to take me and John McVie out and shoot us to get rid of us," concludes Mick Fleetwood. "The bottom line is that we like to play, and we've never given up. We're gonna keep the flag flying, I do believe."

The Music Man

He's enjoyed success and acclaim on stage, in films, and in television, but for Dudley Moore, music remains his first, last, and always love

Dudley Moore does a lot of things well. He acts. Composes. Regularly cuts up audiences with his wit and humor. And he plays music. Jazz. Classical. You name it. The one thing Dudley Moore doesn't do is give interviews. Which is why it is notable that on a recent afternoon, as he sat playing the piano (naturally), Mr. Moore agreed to answer a few questions.

The reason for the change of heart was simple. The subject of the interview was children. Not just any children, but the kids from this year's Disney's Young Musicians Symphony Orchestra. In July, Moore, along with Henry Mancini, a fellow Music Board Member of the Young Musician's Foundation, played host to 76 young players at a music camp in Los Angeles. Then, on July 18, the camp experience culminated in a classical concert which was hosted by Mr. Moore and which premieres on The Disney Channel this August 26 at 7:30 p.m. (The program was produced by Smith-Hemion Productions in association with the Young Musicians Foundation; partial funding for the production was provided by Yamaha Corporation of America, makers of fine musical instruments.)

DISNEY'S YOUNG MUSICIANS SYMPHONY ORCHESTA

World Premiere on Thursday, August 26 at 7:30 p.m. ET/PT

See listings on page 34 for additional air times

While the sophisticated Moore may not have identified with several of the "firsts" that gave many of these kids the jitters—their first plane ride, first time away from home, and first time playing in an orchestra—what he did identify with was their passion for music.

Like many of the children in this year's orchestra, Moore was very young when he started his musical training. "I was five when I started to play. I saw this beast in the living room and clambered on," recalls Moore. And once he began there was no stopping him. Coming from a musical family, Moore remembers hours spent playing duets with his sister, singing "cozy classics" with his family, and sitting by the radio mesmerized by the works of the great composers.

At twelve Moore left his hometown of Dagenham, England to attend London's Guildhood School of Music. His accomplishments there earned him a scholarship to Magdalen College at Oxford University where he received degrees in both music and composition and had his first exposure to the stage. "After graduation, my greatest dream was to play jazz and be in a repertory company." But reality set in as he struggled to pay the bills. "I wrote music for anybody who asked. For ballets, for plays, even commercials for the West Indies." Then in 1959, Moore teamed up with Peter Cook, Jonathan Miller, and Alan Bennett to write and perform in the music and comedy revue, "Beyond the Fringe." It played for four years in London, three years on Broadway and established Dudley Moore's reputation. Yet in spite of all the successes that followed, music remained Moore's first, last and always love. Or as he puts it, "How can you ever be lonely with Bach, Beethoven, Haydn and Mozart around?"

His love for the great orchestral works has led Moore to get involved in trying to inspire and teach younger generations about classical music. But he's realistic. His own son, who at 17 is a gifted keyboard player, has so far shown no interest in the classics, in spite of having the great violinist Pinchas Zukerman for a stepfather. Says Moore, "All you can do is plant the seed and if it grows, terrific! I know from my own experience that the dividends are endless. But kids need to discover this for themselves."

So imagine Moore on a hilltop in Los Angeles, with 76 eight- to 12-year-olds who have made this discovery. Moore laughs when he says he could talk to them about music ad nauseam. But he's excited by their enthusiasm and their abilities. For the concert, Moore joined the orchestra for a performance of George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." And that, says Moore, was wonderful.

"Doing solo recitals is very frightening. But to play with an orchestra. They do their bit. You do your bit. It's very exciting." But what about this orchestra? Moore has, after all, played with the likes of the great Sir Georg Solti and the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

"I found what these kids were doing extraordinary. The string players were of a very high standard, while the wind players were as good as they possibly could be for their age and lung capacity. Why would anyone want to blow into a piece of tubing anyway?" Kidding aside, the most important thing for Moore was that these kids "displayed a passion for music they will keep to the end of their lives."

And if Dudley Moore had one piece of wisdom to impart to children (and their parents) about classical music? "I'd tell them to do what I've always done. Listen.—Listen and be amazed."

MUSIC FOR ANIMATION

MUSIC HAS ALWAYS PLAYED A MAJOR ROLE IN THE DISNEY ANIMATED CLASSICS—AND THE GREAT MOUSE DETECTIVE, A WORLD TELEVISION PREMIERE ON THE MAGICAL WORLD OF DISNEY, IS NO EXCEPTION. THE FILM WAS SCORED BY ACADEMY AWARD-WINNING COMPOSER HENRY MANCINI. IT WAS MANCINI'S FIRST SCORE FOR AN ANIMATED FILM—THOUGH HE IS OF COURSE RENOWNED FOR HIS "PINK PANTHER" THEME. "SCORING AN ANIMATED FILM IS DIFFERENT AND IN MANY WAYS MORE CHALLENGING THAN DOING A LIVE-ACTION PICTURE," MANCINI OBSERVES. "THE PACING IS SO FAST AND EVERYTHING JUST ZIPS RIGHT ALONG. INSTEAD OF TRYING TO PINPOINT EVERY LITTLE ACTION, I TRIED TO COME UP WITH SOMETHING THAT CAPTURED THE WHOLE MOOD OF THE SEQUENCE."

Hannah Needs a Hug!

A collector's treasure, just 3 payments of $16.65*

When a sweet girl like "Hannah" needs a hug, you know her favorite teddy bear is never far away. And right now, as they hold each other ever-so-tightly, her little-girl concerns evaporate one by one. Take in these two little darlings, and you'll give them both the love they need.

"Hannah" by Theo Menzenbach is the first issue in Lots of Love, a collection of porcelain dolls capturing youngsters during tender moments.

"Hannah's" porcelain head and limbs are of a high quality fine bisque. Her hand-set, blue-gray eyes are warm and expressive, bestowing a sweet nature on her expertly sculpted, hand-blushed face. Her arms can be posed so she tenderly embraces her soft and plushy teddy bear.

Recommended by Ashton-Drake, "Hannah" is certified Premiere Grade — your assurance of superior artistry and craftsmanship. As an heirloom-quality doll with exceptional credentials, she may be a wise investment as well.

Bring home this gentle little girl for only $49.95. But hurry... "Hannah Needs a Hug" is issued in an edition ending forever in 1993, after which molds for this doll will be broken. So order today.

BUD GREENSPAN & THE SPIRIT OF OLYMPIC COMPETITION

© Paul J. Sutton/DUOMO

"I THINK THERE'S TOO MUCH IMPORTANCE PLACED ON WINNING OR LOSING," SAYS RENOWNED SPORTS FILMMAKER BUD GREENSPAN OF OLYMPIC COMPETITION. "WE'RE TOO OBSESSED WITH MEDALS—HOW MANY GOLD, SILVER AND BRONZE MEDALS DID THE UNITED STATES COLLECT AS COMPARED TO THE TEAMS FROM THE FORMER SOVIET UNION OR THE CHINESE TEAM OR THE GERMAN TEAM. THE OLYMPICS EMBRACE A HIGHER IDEAL, AN IDEAL THAT STRESSES THE NOBILITY OF THE HUMAN SPIRIT AS EXPRESSED IN ATHLETIC COMPETITION." GREENSPAN'S PERSPECTIVE HAS INFORMED ALL OF HIS CELEBRATED ACCOUNTS OF THE OLYMPICS, AND IN AUGUST THE DISNEY CHANNEL PRESENTS THE WORLD PREMIERE OF GREENSPAN'S NEWEST FILM, BARCELONA '92: 16 DAYS OF GLORY. "WHAT I LOOK FOR ARE STORIES WITH REAL DRAMA—STORIES THAT SHOW THE DEDICATION AND THE SACRIFICE OF THE ATHLETES. SOMETIMES THOSE STORIES ARE OF INDIVIDUALS WHO OVERCOME GREAT ODDS AND WIN, AS WAS THE CASE WITH PABLO MORALES (PICTURED AT LEFT); OTHER STORIES SHOW ATHLETES WHO RISE ABOVE PAIN AND ADVERSITY AND DISAPPOINTMENT JUST TO FINISH THE COMPETITION—WHICH TO ME EMBODIES THE OLYMPIC IDEAL. THIS ISN'T A HIGHLIGHT FILM. EACH EPISODE IN BARCELONA '92 IS A MINI-DRAMA. THE FILM SHOULD TOUCH AND MOVE PEOPLE, REGARDLESS OF WHETHER THEY ARE SPORTS FANS OR NOT. MY FILMS ARE ABOUT PEOPLE WHO JUST HAPPEN TO BE ATHLETES."

BARCELONA '92: 16 DAYS OF GLORY
A World Premiere on Sunday Night Showcase
